What does your job entail?

I am the lead Project Manager for Profound Logic's staff augmentation contract with SDRC which focuses on enhancements and new development for the SANDIS software. I work with Nancy to define project scopes which I then assign to our developers for programming. I conduct the first round of testing of all changes before handing off to Nancy and the SANDIS Support team for beta and UAT. I am also working to identify and implement the latest DevOp tools to improve the efficiency of project management, software development and the deployment process.

How would you describe your job to a 5 year old?

You know how your Xbox keeps up with all your progress and awards? I help create something like that for people that need to track things to help people get things they need to live a better life.

What do you enjoy most about your current role?

Working with software development is like being an inventor, you get to create something that didn't exist before. The most enjoyment comes from creating new applications or process and working with those who benefit from them.

What advice would you give to others who aspire to follow a similar career path?

I started out in IT on the operations side, then took up programming/development, then moved more into project management. Be open to different roles in your area of interest and once you find your strengths build on those. Do something you are good at and enjoy doing.

What has been your favorite project working with the SANDIS team so far?

There have been so many projects and several different types from desktop to mobile, some more visible than others. I like a challenge, so the work done integrating with Google APIs or 2FA ranks up there, but overall, the SANDIS rebranding" project is probably my favorite working with the new updated look and providing for user customizations.

Three words to describe you.

Dedicated, trustworthy, patient

What's something most people don't know about you?

My taste in music has a wide range including 70's, 80's, Elvis, Country Music, and most of all Taylor Swift (ERA's Tour Nashville NI attendee!).
